

THE GOLDEN RULES FOR PERFECT BRICKLAYING

By choosing S.Anselmo bricks you have purchased an extremely high quality material with a particularly natural appearance. However, that is only half the job! Laying the bricks is an important aspect and plays a decisive role in achieving the desired appearance. We would like to take the liberty of reminding you of the fundamental rules which every professional bricklayer knows.

- The bricks should preferably be purchased under one order, so as to draw from a single production batch. In the event of a large job, works should be performed on individual sides of the construction perimeter.
- The storage area must be protected from rain.
- Use a mortar suitable for facing bricks (ask the manufacturer for a guarantee).
- The definition of levels, thickness of joints, number of brick courses and design of the alignment must take place after adequate sampling of the products. The declared dimensions are "nominal" sizes.
- Check the colour of the mortar and the bricks as well as the quality of the bricklaying by means of a small test wall.
- Fit the damp proof course and provide a system for collection/removal of condensation.
- The bricklaying must be organised so that the material for vertical rows is taken from at least 3 pallets simultaneously.
- Wet the bricks adequately before use so as not to "burn" the mortar.
- Provide ventilation holes at the base and top of the brickwork and ensure that the flow of air between the facing bricks and the load-bearing wall (cavity wall with ties) is not obstructed by mortar.
- Provide adequate protection of the wall against rain during bricklaying.
- Suspend the works in the event of temperatures close to 0°C.
- At the end of the works and only after the "curing" of the binder completely wash the dry wall with an acid solution.
- Waterproofing products must not be used.
- Battens, angles and special parts should be ordered together with the bricks.
